

SOME EXAMPLES OF COMMON SELF-DEFEATING
BELIEFS AND REALISTIC ALTERNATIVES

Self Defeating Belief	Realistic Alternative
1. One should be liked or approved of by almost anyone.	No one is liked by everyone. It's unrealistic to expect to be.
2. To be worthwhile, one must be competent in all respects.	One should not expect to be perfect in all respects.
3. Things should always be the way we want them to be, and it's terrible when they aren't.	Things are not always the way we want them to be, but that's not the end of the world.
4. A person's present and future behavior is irreversibly dependant on significant past events. People can never change.	People can and do change.
5. Every problem must have an ideal solution, and it's really bad when this solution is not found.	Many problems don't have ideal solutions. It's unrealistic to expect them to.
6. Everything I do must automatically lead to an immediate payoff.	Realistically, only a small proportion of what I do can be expected to lead to an immediate payoff.
7. Individuals have little control over their personal happiness or misery.	We can exercise a great deal of control over our own happiness or make our misery worse.
8. If there is some possibility that something can go wrong, one should worry about it a great deal.	We should make reasonable preparations for adversity, but excessive worrying won't help.
9. It is easier to avoid than to face difficulties and responsibilities inherent in living.	In the long run, it's better to face difficulties and accept responsibility for managing them.
10. People can't be trusted to make their own decisions.	I can facilitate other people's decision making, but I can't make decisions for them.
